 Every age has its peculiar folly; and if Charles Mackay, the author of the mid-nineteenth-century classic Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds, were alive today, he would surely see "cannabinophobia" as a popular delusion along with the "tulipmania" and "witch hunts" of earlier ages. I believe that we are now at the cusp of this particular popular delusion, which to date has been responsible for the arrest of over 20 million U.S. citizens. Future historians will likely look at this epoch and recognize it as another instance of the "madness of crowds." Millions of marijuana users have already arrived at this understanding.
- For a short period in the '70s, it was possible to believe that this popular delusion was beginning to lose its deeply embedded grip. Whatever the cultural conditions that made it possible, there was no doubt that the discussion about marijuana was becoming more sensible as we became conscious of the irrationality of classifying this drug as one with a high abuse potential and no medical value. If that trend had continued, it was likely that within another decade marijuana would have been sold and regulated in the United States in much the same way as alcohol.
- At that time, we had reason to be optimistic. In 1971 the National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse, appointed by President Nixon, had recommended the elimination of penalties for possession of marijuana for personal use and casual nonprofit transfers of small amounts. In 1973 Oregon had become the first state to decriminalize marijuana, making possession of less than an ounce a civil offense penalized by a small fine. In 1975 Alaska had eliminated all penalties for private possession and cultivation of less than 343 Unnatural (un-American) to make Nature against the law. Real Patriots don't arrest Americans for plants.

four ounces. President Carter had endorsed decriminalization, as had the American Medical Association, the American Psychiatric Association, the American Bar Association, and the National Council of Churches. By 1977 most states had reduced simple possession to a misdemeanor, and by 1980 eleven states had actually decriminalized possession.

Unfortunately, this trend did not continue. The marijuana reform movement peaked in the late 1970s. In 1978 Dr. Peter Bourne, the White House drug advisor who had helped President Carter move toward reform, resigned and was replaced by Lee Dogoloff, a hardliner. In that same year the proportion of the population favoring marijuana legalization began to fall from its 1977 high of 28 percent. Under President Reagan the government instituted a program of "zero tolerance." By 1983 it was spraying the dangerous insecticide Paraquat on domestic marijuana crops and using military methods to uproot cannabis plants and arrest growers in northern California.

In 1987 Supreme Court nominee Douglas Ginsberg had to withdraw under pressure because he had smoked marijuana as a law professor. In 1989, under President George H. W. Bush, the federal government began Operation Green Merchant, which confiscated lists of people who had ordered indoor plant-growing equipment and raided their homes. The first Bush administration also worked hard to persuade Alaska to recriminalize marijuana possession and succeeded in 1990. That same year Congress passed a bill calling for federal transportation funds to be withheld from states refusing to enact a six-month suspension of the automobile licenses of people convicted of marijuana possession.

These increasingly harsh government measures (and the growing hysteria of antimarijuana citizens' groups) did not reflect any new knowledge about the dangers of this drug. The more than a third of a century since the publication of the first edition of Marijuana Reconsidered has produced remarkably little laboratory, sociological, or epidemiological evidence of serious health or social problems caused by marijuana. The present attitude of the government and antimarijuana crusaders bears the same relationship to reality that the film Reefer Madness bore in 1936. But the dissonance is even more striking now, because we know so much more.

Since 1971 millions of dollars have been spent by the National Institute of Drug Abuse to study the dangers of cannabis. This vast research enterprise has completely failed to provide a scientific basis for prohibition. Although evidence against toxicity continues to accumulate, the government persists in escalating its war on marijuana users, most cruelly on those who
