so many of modern history's great moments. When Gutenberg's presses started rolling, it was hemp paper that received the ink and spread the word of the Bible to an awakening Europe. When the urge to find a new world, a new way of living, gave rise to the age of discovery some 500 years ago, it was hemp that powered this urge, giving the explorers the sails and cordage needed to cross the oceans.

When it came time to define this new world, its goals and aspirations, it was on hemp paper that the drafts of the United States Constitution and Declaration of Independence were written. As the young nation moved west it was hemp that covered the settlers' wagons.

Even after being outlawed, this fugitive plant has returned to help us in times of special need. During World War II when supplies of raw fiber were cut off by the Japanese, hemp was reintroduced to the U.S. farmer to support the war effort, as the U.S. Department of Agriculture proclaimed "hemp for victory." In the 1960s a movement of youth inspired by the ideals of peace and love burst on to the world stage challenging the social, economic, and religious order of the day. This movement of millions upon millions had no leaders, no ideology, no strategy for change, only a deep rooted sense of the hypocrisy of the "establishment's materialistic world view" and a special relationship with a plant—a plant that has receptors in the human brain waiting to receive its biochemical messages. A message of respect for the earth, its plants and animals, for our bodies and the foods we eat, for cultures and people other than our own was heard and the sea of change it brought is still being played out today.

How extraordinary that hemp should once again appear, but this time in the role of environmentalist and healer. Today hemp offers us a very real and immediate solution to deforestation, the abuses of the petrochemical industry, and the destruction of our top soils as well as help in health care problems as diverse as glaucoma and A.I.D.S.

Only the arrogance of the modern mentality, worshipping at the altar of the church of progress, would reject and deny the history and virtues of hemp. Is it necessary to fear and outlaw this plant? Or are we really trying to outlaw a change in consciousness? Try as we may, a change in culture and consciousness is already happening—a change that is earth-honoring and embraces the healing, environmental, and spiritual qualities of this special relationship between hemp and humanity.
