LIONS, AND TIGERS, AND BEARS, OH MY!

From worshipping piles of rock, man advanced slowly, with stops along the way, to enjoy the wildlife. Animal cults are perhaps one of the oldest religious gestures known.

Lions. The lion was associated with the Egyptian gods Re and Horus; there was a lion-god at Baalbek and a lion-headed goddess, Sekhet. The Arabs had a lion-god, Yaghuth. In modern Africa we find a lion idol among the Balonda.

Tigers. The tiger is associated with Siva and Durga, but its cult is confined to the wilder tribes. In Nepal the tiger festival is known as Bagh Jatra, and the worshippers dance disguised as tigers. Tiger-gods are also found in Hanoi and Manchuria.

Bears. Bears were big in Siberia: As recently as 1900, among the Ainu of Sakhalin, a young bear was caught at the end of winter and fed for some nine months. Then after receiving honors it was killed, and the people, who had previously demonstrated grief at its approaching fate, danced merrily and feasted on its body. The bear is traditionally associated with Bern in Switzerland, and in 1832 a statue of Artio, a bear goddess, was dug up there.
